PHILODAMUS, I -

PHILIPPUS,

102 X S 4 V

.lorasvil

- Mr. Hauptach.

Care and William State

A - MarDarian.

- Mar Hunn

Lewis Lawre.

TRAGEDY.

By Richard Bentley Esq.

ADVERTISEMBNT.

As it was Acted at the

THEATRE-ROYAL, COVENT-GARDEN,

From the Motores Chronicle.

It has been judged private to a first the ablancing advances, and the right also the state of the season of the state of the season of the state of

THE 14th DECEMBER, 1782.

to conduct of the state of the total of the ter a too and when sty, on Manage, someout also mailled Coppe, made as

PRINTED FOR J. DODSLEY, IN PALL-MALL.

PROLOCUE

* when performed, it was reduced to four tets.

the An one two charges whereaster to machine or trainer, taking the provided to content of canil, then

DRAMATIS PERSONE.

PHILODAMUS, — — MR. HENDERSON.
PHILIPPUS, — MR. LEWIS.
EPICRATES, — MR. WHITFEILD.
EARINUS, — — MR. DAVIES..
DOLABELLA, — MR. HULL.
RUBRIUS, — — — MISS SATCHELL.
ERATO, — MISS YOUNGE.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THAT the Public may know bow different an effect this Tragedy had on the Stage, from that which it has been allowed to produce in the Closet, it has been judged proper to print the following Account; which might also, from its own candour and merit, claim some notice.

-ROMAL, COVENT-GARDEN.

From the Morning Chronicle.

"THEATRICAL INTELLIGENCE.

"ON Saturday evening a new Tragedy, in four Acts, called PHILODA-MUS was performed, for the first Time, at Covent-Garden Theatre, and proved the most entertaining of any Blank Verse Production represented on the Stage for some Years, since the Audience were repeatedly provoked to laughter, by the strange and ridiculous jumble of the Low and the Losty, of vulgar Familiarity and elevated Imagery, which made up the dialogue of a Play, without either Plot, Interest, or Situation, sufficiently powerful to render its exhibition tolerably affecting. The Audience having unequivocally expressed their contempt for the Tragedy, the Manager, without the smallest scruple, made up his mind to the matter, and determined not to provoke the indignation of his best Patrons, by attempting to disgrace his Theatre with a second exhibition of Philodamus. If any thing could apologize for the error of having brought such a Play upon the Stage, it was the unusual handsome manner in which the fentence of the Audience was submitted to; a circumstance that redounds much to the credit of the Manager."

PROLOGUE.

PROLOGUE, by a Friend.

All Angua' Spoken by Mr. HULLall dashag

TO-night no conqueror marks his course in blood,
No patriot dies to earn the public good!
No empire crumbles, and no plot succeeds,
Nor liberty expires, nor monarch bleeds!
Nor paint we, for resemblance of the times,
Ambitious virtues, and heroic crimes!

O'er humbler scenes of peaceful life we move, Familiar sorrows, and domestic love!

No classic tears we draw by rules of art, Nor aim thro' education at the heart!

Nor hope we nature in those tears to find, Which science borrows of th' impassive mind!

But in rude hearts, the quarry where she rests, And elemental pangs in unwrought breasts:

As when the sparks of borrow'd light expire, We strike the rugged bed of genial fire!

And if by chance our muse to soar shall dare,
In purer regions of sublimer air—
Should paint, unmask'd what Roman virtue was,
Her venal justice, her distorted laws—
She asks no heart with treasur'd knowledge fraught,
—Th' unletter'd Indian needs not to be taught.
Where'er her bloody banner Europe waves,
Or war or commerce marks the land for slaves:
What havoc has the lordly Roman made,
That Asia mourns not for ignoble trade?
—Trade draws the sword, and fraud with force combin'd,
Sit brooding o'er the chains of half mankind!

Oh may each gracious drop that dews our scenes, Each generous sigh our hapless story wins, Be drops of balm to ease a nation's pains, Be mercy's breath o'er India's wasted plains; So might she cease to curse the British name, Forget her bleeding wrongs—our crimson shame; So might we snatch from memory's faithful page The blushing record—and redeem our age!

" With gold ensure to bride five handred

EPILOGUE, by a Friend.

Spoken by Miss Younge, in the Character of EUPHEMIA.

OH bard condition of our belples stage,
And murd rous poetry's remorfeles rage!
Are there no laws to check the tragic mood,
No inquisition to be made for blood,
E'en when unmaster'd madness whets the knife,
And so unnatural the hate to life,
That for a husband's sake it kills a wife?

Had but our author check'd his furious spite, (As besides me he has slain three to-night)
What hinder'd, but more lovely from my woe,
And breathing joy in sorrosw's sable shew,
(As dames of Ephesus and Britain know)
To a rich Roman nabob's arms I'd come,
And lady Rubrius borne the belle in Rome?

Of all blest wives, sure I bad been the first,

—Blest—in proportion as my spouse was curs'd!

The wealth of Asia on my breast I'd worn,

And for my toilette sack'd the realms of morn;

Then sparkling perjuries had bound my bair,

And twinkling murders beam'd in either ear.

Pale famish'd provinces grown pearls, to deck,

Entwin'd with diamond treacheries, my neck;

A people's fetters had my wrists consin'd,

And realms been slaves my slowing zone to bind!

My radiant seet had held two prostrate kings,

And dwindled Rajas kis'd my hands in rings!

More bright I'd shone than Jewish dames, of old, In pilfer'd trinkets of Egyptian gold! One trishing law the favour'd race transgress'd— But me the broken Decalogue had dress'd!

All bearts and eyes had homage paid alike,
As wealth or beauty had the power to strike!
These thought, no charm that pious wife could lack
Who bore her husband's sins upon her back!
While these had mis'd, who trivial toys despise,
In me no heauty, as in him no vice,
Or lov'd the crimes of which I wore the prize!
And cried aloud, "No want of virtue sullies,
"With gold enough to bribe five hundred Tully's!"

as his own to make its appearance! Burthe abarages of Writer, which the late extreasure abare of that ealent has not at all controuged to inafrate, does not in its powerfully enough to the producing one's felf profelled risans the best tost evolution.

The fole yiew of the author in the liberty he is now risking, is only by way of appear to You, Madan, whether the character of complete domestic virtue, afternmed in that of Philadanus, has been faithfully copied

FAR be from the author the prefumption of affixing to this trifle any thing so respectable as Your Name. What impudence to have ventured to place it, where he has a scruple to suffer one of so little importance whole

as his own to make its appearance! But the character of Writer, which the late extreme abuse of that talent has not at all contributed to illustrate, does not invite powerfully enough to the producing one's self professedly in that light to the Public.

The fole view of the author in the liberty he is now risking, is only by way of appeal to You, Madam, whether the character of complete domestic virtue, attempted in that of Philodamus, has been faithfully copied from nature. Of this, Madam, it is impossible, any one can be so good a judge as Yourself, who have constantly before Your eyes the most perfect example of it, that, perhaps, ever actually existed: an example, whose whose lustre still to increase, You are contented, MADAM, to fuffer Your own great and amiable qualities, which in any other part of the world would have burst out unrivalled, to rank, in this, but in the fecond place. The loss is compensated in the great share it is allowed, MADAM, You have in the very virtues to which You yield the preeminence. They are fuch, that had they been exercised only within the walls of a private family, they could not have failed of winning their way abroad into the general esteem of mankind. What universal adoration must they then command, when it is nothing less than the most extended dominion upon the globe, which, in reality, proves to be this vast family, under the most vigilant and and indulgent of parents; and receives to its utmost boundary the effects of that fatherly tenderness and benevolence, which seem to have been first put in practice in their more immediate connections, in order to learn from experience how they might afterwards be best applied, and diffused, to the most diffused, to the most diffused.

If, in return, Madam, our prayers to Heaven are but short, it proceeds from no deficiency in our gratitude; we think we have fulfilled every dictate of duty and love, when we have ardently petitioned, that You, Madam, may long continue to share, adorn, and reward, all the virtues that can render human nature amiable and respectable.

one

eminence. They are fach, that had they

「vii 7

The author of Philodamus has the honour to be, with the most profound respect and veneration, PHILODAMUST

> Errond rest in love with End of MADAM, Donagena, the Ropan Prepor.

APRONIUS, Minifer to his Pleating

VERRES, his Legate

Purrippus, Als Sont

ERATO PRIME TO TO TO

S C H N E, Lamping betoveb flore on the Hellerpont.

An Apartment in Philodayrus's Palace.

Arafpex, Augur, Soldiere, Servants, Mindrela

* In a Name we are trained of om or that of Philodiana, the Aurhor imagined he night be trained of the second as What hall I call its with an indifference artists of a filliplication

and most humble servant.

eaffer Cadence.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

[114]

PHILIPPUS, his Son.

EPICRATES, in love with ERATO.

EARINUS, PHILODAMUS'S Freedman.

DOLABELLA, the Roman Prætor.

VERRES, his Legate

RUBRIUS, Dependents on him.

SESTIUS, Minister to his Pleasures.

CORNELIUS, an Officer.

ERATO, Daughter to PHILODAMUS.

EUPHEMIA, her Friend.

Aruspex, Augur, Soldiers, Servants, Minstrels.

SCENE, Lampfacus, a City of Asia on the Hellespont.

An Apartment in Philodamus's Palace.

* In a Name we are to little accustomed to as that of Philodamus, the Author imagined he might be allowed to make free with the Quantity, in favour of an easier Cadence.

and most humble servant.

PHILO

work to read in, as a hook held open, of the r

Should thus bank district the read and bluede

A TRAGEDY.

A mind, to pois'd as yours, thould be induktions I'v rafe up trouble from to thight a tource.

They doft not know the feelings of a father,);

Finds objects for itfelf, where most waskery.

A C To I, ow S C E N E I. S. C. E A C To I.

PHILODAMUS, EARINUS.

PHILODAMUS.

ND now, Earinus, my faithful freedman,
My foul's again at eafe.

EARINUS.

Most happy hearing.

Philo-

PHILODAMUS.

Thy approv'd honesty deserves my confidence—
EARINUS.

You honour me.

PHILODAMUS.

So that I fairly own,

Since I discover'd Erato my daughter,
What shall I call it? with an indiscretion
Ill-suited to that tim'rous modesty,
Whose only safe entrenchment is reserve,
Receiv'd the private visits of Epicrates,
My mind has labour'd under some disturbance.

EARINUS!

Your pardon but what shadow of a likelihood, One of a same unblemish'd as Epicrates, Should entertain a thought that might disturb Philodamus, whose merit, blood, and riches, Claim the first rank in Lampsacus?

PHILODAMUS.

None. But my fensibility was wounded, I That she, whose undisguised soul, till now, I wont to read in, as a book laid open, Should thus have clos'd the page.

EARINUS.

A mind, so pois'd as yours, should be industrious. To raise up trouble from so slight a source.

Philoda Amus.

Thou dost not know the feelings of a father,
Whose apprehensions shoot to the same height,
As does his tenderness; and whose anxiety
Finds objects for itself, where most unlikely.
But to the purpose. — I at length determin'd
To call for explanation from Epicrates.
E'en now I leave him.

And, my Lord, you found him——
PHILODAMUS.

Found him, Earinus? as I could wish.
But see, my son! which cuts our time too short
For more particulars.

ym sovieles vitene Exit Earinus.

You honour me. ... II P M L MD MM Os. 8

PHILIPPUS, PHILODAMUS.

What shall I call it? with an indiscretion

Early this morning
I fought to pay my duty to my father,
But was inform'd, bus'ness had call'd him forth.
Phillodam Us.

It had, Philippus. But I must observe.

That bus ness, exercise, nor yet diversion.

Have any longer pow'r to call you forth.

-olin'T

PHI-

By forms lets fetters ut quality H que clearer;

I know not how it is.——Our inclinations Slacken fometimes to flow with renew'd force.

PHILODAMUS.

Whate'er the cause, the change is rather sudden. 'Tis not fo long fince you foreran the fun. Clamour and bustle ever waken'd with thee. When I inquir'd, fometimes it was Philippus Would try his horses at the Hippodrome, Sometimes the morn was flartled at his hounds, That claim'd with ceaseless quest the promis'd chace; At other, ev'ry thing was preparation For the Gymnasium: now they're all forgot.

PHILIPPUS. MON DOV ho WOLL

I was not reckon'd over negligent

How the leaft breaksu MA do I the ach may point,

Your other studies too, I find, lie fallow. Here am I paying, at a vast expence, Philosophers, forfooth! to rail at riches, mon and To vaunt the praise of simple pulse and roots, (Who, by the by, despise them at my table) While you loiter the live-long day in idleness, With Erato, and my new guest Euphemia, Whom, on the death of Agatho her father In banishment at Corinth, for the love I knew your fifter bare her, I took hither.

the country, where the Proven and

That love gives reputation to her judgment. Had but our crabbed rough philosophers Avail'd them of Euphemia's gentle manners, They might have learn'd, what has so puzzled them, How Virtue looks and acts in her own shape.

PHILODAMUS.

Fools only know extremes. Is there no middle Between the harsh formality of bookmen, And trifling delicacy that makes woman?

Nor yet condemn hels wad I the Pau fame

I fee no point in which they yield to us. Their apprehension's quicker, and their reason

By forms less fetter'd, their expression clearer;
They seek no shelter from authorities,
Nor do they strive to veil their ignorance
In terms of art, as we do: then their gentleness
Smooths off the rugged points of argument,
Melting contention into pleasantry.
Discourse, such as Euphemia's and my sister's,
Conceiv'd by sense, and harmoniz'd by beauty,
Reaches the heart, while it informs the mind,
Softens and civilizes all our ways.

Philodam us

Not to examine whither, but too often,
These over-civilizing freedoms tend,
How did you venture, (you their wise admirer,
Who ought to know how delicate their fame,
How the least breath, that blight reproach may point,
Oft with irreparable taint deforms
The best complexion'd innocence that dares
But err from common forms), to introduce Epicrates to Erato's apartment,
Which, by our manners, is severely barr'd
To all but nearest consanguinity?

The age, fince you were young, has shaken off
Many the slavish customs of tradition.

That country, where all forms are thrown afide,
However venerably perhaps deriv'd
From the collected wisdom of past times,
And meant a mound against some national bent,
Some native inclinations of the soil,
Is on the point of losing decency,
And sinking into rank licentiousness.

Now, good my father, if there be to blame,
Do not involve my fifter in my fault;
Nor yet condemn her conduct; her fair fame
Stands not within the verge of reprehension; or ever has the giv'n him ear alone, do not involve to the stands.

Euphemia, or myself, were always present.

PHILO-

"Twas inconfiderate and rash, no matter; I've hit upon a way to remedy it, Which you'll foon learn. Order your fifter hither. Exit Philippus.

S C E N E III, 14 6 10 10 10

As my acquaistance, my factety,

PHILODAMUS, Such is the heart of man. No fooner quit Of one anxiety, up flarts another, of the desired back Ready to fill the vacant feat. It grieves me To fee this boy so very deep involv'd. His thought, discourse, and soul is all Euphemia. How desperate the fi'ry wish of youth! How blind to the long train of ills behind! High on Imagination's upper bough Pleasure suspends her fruit, and shews its cheek, Flaming with ruddy gold, to our impatience: Does Fortune tofs it to our longing hand? We find in melancholy disappointment on het Il wo Y The core confum'd by worms and rottenness, The juice we hop'd fo racy turn'd to bitterness.

And pray, this wher backy : 3709 cag him, Has ought particular e'er oxio'd between you?

HILLODAN US.

PHILODAMUS, ERATO. No more than general civiling

PHILODAMUS: 1919 reinstra Good morrow, my fair child; how dost thou, Erato? ERATOLING

Health to my father. What are his commands? 100 ?

PHILODAMUS. I have been rating here your brother, child,

Rather more warmly than my manner is.

ERAIDOLIH T I'm forry for the occasion; but I see from of Your looks are still serene, your brow unruffled: Mirth more than anger sparkles in your eye.

I think

I think you scarce have givn us opportunity To learn how you look angry.

PHILODAMUS.

. and in radii may rating why no, daughter, and

For I regard my children as my friends, As my acquaintance, my fociety, Connected by the tend'rest strings of love. 'Tis their affection, 'tis their confidence I want, and not a formal, cold obedience. Dread is the feed from which rebellion fprings, And teaches foon to wish a vacant throne.

ERATO. Your milder government has rather chosen To copy from those happy states, where one Is rais'd, for the convenience of the whole, Rather to represent than exercise of all or build woll The pow'r supreme god regent c'noinnigent no dgill

PHILODAM U.S. shoold orner I'm glad you think so of me. Well, fince I have not fought to reign by terror, You'll tell me in what light you fee Epicrates: ERATO vd milino ero edl'

So close an union knits him to Philippus, I fee him almost as another brother.

PHILODAMUS.

And pray, this other brother, as you call him, Has ought particular e'er pass'd between you?

ERATO: ACOUNT No more than general civility, Th' attention ever paid our fex by yours, No other than between him and Euphemia.

PHILODAMUS.

Health to my firher, What are his tememinal ruo Y

.a U ERATO.

Are as of an acquaintance That's always entertaining, oft instructive, work works. PHILODAMUS.

No more?

doi:d) I

Your scoles ora full fercion was Brow ustuffled:

I'm forry for the occasion; but I fee

Mirch more than anger fparkles sarom oNe.

PHILODAMUS! Sporting on a

Truft me, I'm glad of it.

For when I found that you receiv'd his visits, And with a kind of caution that imply'd We would not have the old man find us out, ---

ERATO. Smint a istance

Will you but give me leave?

PHILODAMUS.

Not till I've done .---

I did inform me of his character;
And find him, as the general run o' th' time,
Wild in his ways, unmaster'd in his temper,
One who has taken in his teeth the bit,
And run away from rule, one whose glib tongue:
Distils a dang'rous and infective softness,
Which on the passive and unguarded mind
Works, like a feather dipp'd in pois'nous ointment, Pleasing while it destroys.---

ERATO.

Do but permit me
To tell you, you're most grossly misinform'd.
Some private enemy hath slander'd him,
If worth like his can find an enemy.
Oh that I knew the wretch! Contempt cleave to him!
Nay, common fame, which, as it rolls along,
Licks up each speck and spot of character,
Impatient to produce them to our eyes,
Speaks him of conduct irreproveable.

PHILODAMUS.

What, ho! my daughter, whither are you running? And why so warm for any one acquaintance, However entertaining or instructive?

bear, not my care, .or AN Bo quick transition

Alas! you shew me to myself at once.

How could I be so ign'rant of my heart!

I blush at my own folly. Oh! my father,

Teach me my erring steps how to retrace.

Command me, and I never see him more.

PHILODAMUS. ... VOY LEAVE OF

This picture have I drawn of thy Epicrates,

As in a mirrour that inverts the truth,
To punish you for not confiding in me.
Start you, my girl, to hear me call him thine?
Why, what a fire has lightned in thy cheek,
And glimmers o'er thy bosom? Yes, my child,
Epicrates is thine, and in an hour
From hence expect to interchange your vows.

ERATO.

I do not only start, I tremble too,
Quite giddy at the unexpected change.
'Tis but this instant that I find I love,
The very same you give away my hand.
I look in wonder round me, like a voyager,
Who, quitting his own country late at evening,
Sleeps o'er the easy passage to another,
And wakes to a new people, and new manners,
Where the whole region wears a diff rent aspect
From that he left.

PHILODAMUS.

As to thy voyage, child,
Be fure it lands thee on a funshine coast,
Where not a cloud yet lours. But think of this,
That happiness grows not on earth spontaneous.
It is a plant that calls for delicate rearing.
Trisling neglects may chill its tender growth,
And imperceptibly produce that canker
Shall dim the orient tints impress'd by heaven,
And give its fading lustre for a prey
To the harsh worm unkindness. Think this certain,
A necessary consequence, whenever Familiarity outruns complacency.

ERATO MENT SEE TOWN

Fear not my care. But this too quick transition,
This hurrying so abruptly into marriage,
Ere it is whisper'd in Inquiry's ear,
Robs it of its due air of decency.

PHILODAMUS.

I should diffres you, were I to assent
To what your modesty would ask for form.
Do you get ready, while I give my orders

How

How to prepare the feast; not with great pomp, Yet dignity, because the legate Verres, Rav'nous as th' eagle on the Roman enfigns, Is just arriv'd; and 't would inform his avarice Where to feek out for prey, should we unfold All our magnificence to 's greedy eye. gast out of her diff and Exit Philodamus.

And reverent whintign in your pleafure, it will be bend indeed for indeed or or, 2

All that I know, is, that in pure effection

Since they're so much my bene and inclination,

I thell not brow the TARAE to dury. Only to love and honour such a father, Is to be still ungrateful. I would give Some wild, romantic proof of my obedience, Out of the common, trampled road of duty-Here comes Epicrates. Why all this tumult, This trouble at him, whom I us'd to meet With transport, yet be mistress of myself?

The fearch in bearing the same all my foul. And my bear judgment goes had a line out and a line out.

More and new vartues for its admiration.

EPICRATES, ERATO.

How poor, and how deferted, thall I feem,

EPICRAT B Snipami odt nad W My loveliest Erato, I can perceive A fweet confusion in your look, that tells me You are not unacquainted with my errand. Will not this gentle hand confirm the promise This best of days has giv'n me from thy father?

ERATO. You have it. But I fear, Epicrates, [giving her hand. You knew too well before to need the question: For furely you had eyes to read my heart, However it impos'd upon itself. 3U991.1119 May not a time arrive, when you'll despise me, For the facility with which you win me?

My friend ! myela That Share Bels how'r on thee Yes, could a time arrive, when imposition,

Difguise,

Disguise, and mock'ry, and th' ungen'rous pride
Of giving pain, should grow more meritorious,
Than noble plainness, and free honesty,
Which lift thee from the level of most women,
And make thee ev'ry thing my heart could wish.

ERATO.

Such may you think me still, and I'm too happy!
All that I know, is, that in pure affection,
And reverent submission to your pleasure,
It will be hard indeed for me to err,
Since they're so much my bent and inclination,
I shall not know they are a debt to duty.

EFICRATES.

Thank thee, my gentle leve! I am not one
T' out passion passion, and to o'er-stretch sense,
To rant, in wild hyperbole and rapture,
Such stuff as takes the triflers of thy sex.
My love, obedient to my reason, grew;
Which weigh'd, and study'd thee, and still discover'd
More and new virtues for its admiration.
The search has justified excess of love;
And my best judgment gives thee all my soul.

E R A T O.

Grant, Heaven, you do not over rate my worth!
How poor, and how deferted, shall I seem,
When the imaginary virtues vanish,
And my defects step for ward to your view?

There I have not a fear. But feel! Philippus no Y. What mean his downcast look, and taggard eye? What mean his downcast look, and taggard eye?

ERATO.

You have it But I fear, Epicrates friving her band. You knew UV well Elou to Bee Tub Squedion:

For furely you had eyes to read my hours,

PHILIPPUS, EPICRATES, ERATO.

May not a time arrive, who you'll define me.

For the facility way a spring property me?

My friend! my brother! Francount of the spring when the could a time write, when a position.

EPICRATES.

It does, till I can hold no more. My friend!

I cannot love thee better, tho' I gain

Another tender name by which to call thee.

Related of feign'd Boves 9 La I. H Td persons;

All joy to thee, my dearest Erato!

My brother, you felicitate but coolly.

It may be so, for I am scarce myself;
Else the content of such a friend and sister
Would animate me into exultation.
Euphemia leaves us.

And penetrate, with o TA R Breent meening

This was unexpected.

It gives me grief. How shall I bear the parting?

So: fuddenly town I bluos wolf I read on ovil .do

DI

ERATO.

Has ought offended her?

Think, 'tis the fine w.q.qlint nul Ch cannot aid thee

Wretch that I am! by telling her I lov'd.

For that I love her, with a flame as pure

As elemental fire unfoil'd by smoke

(Whate'er her bield TA Rong & her beauty

Has long been visible enough, Philippus, has a wall

The day when the arriv'd at Lampfacus,
(The fea had ruffled her, and pal'd her check
With fuch a swinning languidness, it added

An air of sensibility to beauty, what it meant to steal from.)

She had my hand at landing on the pier,

And her first touch was enswer'd at my heart,

Which instantly did homage to its sovereign.

I waited long in humble, distant awe,
Smoth'ring my pains; till now, this very morning,

Their violence forc'd a passage from my heart.

C 2

F.PI-

EPICRATES.

How did the hear you? It on blod ato I lid the ball

PHILIPPUS. ON SVOI DOMES I

Anotherstar a the would a tale of tonA

Related of feign'd love, and fancy'd persons;
A mere Milesian novel, which we read,
Nor find one track behind it on the mind:
Said, it requir'd no answer, for to-morrow
She sail'd for Corinth.

It inay be for i eto TAG Bufell

But, in these cases, trust a woman's judgment:
We read each other with a piercing eye,
And penetrate, with ease, each latent meaning.
I'm sure Euphemia loves.

Lugad mPhilpipipos. Boing om sovig al

Oh, I've no doubt! Now could I gnaw my heart.

EPICRATES.

Hear me; and if I speak with liberty,
Think, 'tis the surgeon's hand which cannot aid thee
Without first giving pain. Can you conceive,
High as your father stands in Lampsacus,
With such a city bowing to his greatness,
He will consent to wed his only son
(Whate'er her birth, her merit, or her beauty,
May plead in favour of Euphemia)
Into a family, whom banishment
Has stripp'd without remorfe of its possessions?
I could say more, but fear to wound you deeper.
Oh, strive t' o'er-rule this unavailing passion,
And be in time advis'd.

That only height's o grain H at to fleat from.

Go, and advise
The lapse of water down the broken cliff,
Not to obey its own propensity
Which drives it headlong to its place of rest:
Then, if it heed thy bidding, come again,
And I will try to bind my passion prisoner

A STURMANGCEODIY H 43

In Reason's icy fetters. Ah! Epicrates, "Tis easier to advise, than to affist.

EPICRATES.

Mistake me not. I For the I would distuade, I A
Yet my dissuation frees no obligation
That friendship owes to serve you your own way. H q
Therefore, try you to win upon Euphemia,
But to delay her voyage for a little of I H q
Mean while, my Erato shall press her sather of the own over the sax, wilt thou not, my love to need to be a recovered to the sax.

See that propriety and elegancies of you will not encroach'd upon by eld in a flantity.

Are not encroach'd upon by eld in a flantity.

bid upon possadW.

I mail.

Were I averse to't; but in such a cause, My inclinations run before your bidding. And be you sure, my brother, I will plead

Do not so check your noise and to prove the gracefully simply and I swot some gracefully simply and I swot some of the sword of the successful of the sword of th

I see, and thank, thy goodness, Erato, should the will will will be a solitant lie will will be a solitant lie will will be a substance, and thou despondent in thy heart, at or most To give th' unbodied ghost of hope a substance, and ob back And tinge it of some colour: but thy love Leaves it, at best, evanid.

EPICRATES.

Go to Euphemia, while we try Philodamus.

[To Erato.] UMAGO [Exeunt.

itly erch entailment and owner.

Purlos A Mus.
How, now! What brings thee here, my gentle daughter?

Fulls heavy for the parting. Then Philippus

Euphemia means to leave us DA no bna illustin pauli id

Part to be a must be to the But, Brato, where is the support robe?
I thought to find thee crick d in all the fpleadour.

A STURMANCOEDUNIN H PS

,bid BAR PANUE.

In Reason's icy fetters. Ah! Epicrates, Tis caffer to advise, than to affift.

EPICRATES. Mistake me not. I FE Mo Dolld dilliad D. A Yet my diffusion frees no obligation

That friendshauning unin Age vaum Pur HI Therefore, try you to win upon Euphemia,

But to delay her voyage, su m A de o 1 1 H T You have my orders. Only this, Earling, ym, elidw meaM Say, wilt thou not, my love sonagels bar wilt thou not, my love sonagels and elegance will thou not. Are not encroach'd upon by cloying quantity.

I shall.

Were I averse to't; but in such a cause, My inclinations run between Muk deduch q And be you fure, it suring transfer and way so bn A Do not so check your hand that abandanced Its diw Smile gracefully upon my bound! I Porget not sit or b'nio! That my dependents and the poor have mouths, and I bluo Alas! too feldom fill'd. VA And can one lee uoy evelied I al The feast, which laving luxury has pil during over bluon I With all that fea, and air, and earth produce, Without the thought, how many of our species bas , and I Which frives, the the the worlder will bid did W And do not know our dier of So, the gone odna 'it swig o'l And tismiras tixate colour: but thy love Leaves it, at boit, evanid.

EPICRATES. In cold in cold II Now nared 2 Co to Euphemia, while we try Philodaneus.

PHILODAMUS ERATO.

PHILODAMUS. What brings thee here, my gentle daughter? How, now! ERATO.

Euphemia means to leave us, and my heart Feels heavy for the parting. Then Philippus-PHILODAMUS.

But, Erato, where is thy nuptial robe? I thought to find thee trick'd in all the splendour

Which

Which the unfatished and eurious hand at it as boot Of ornament could torture out of hancy, ish ve mil

The care, the fondnew, Tthest drental friendship; I hope you have not found me over studious die HA Of that vain soience. You have often told me, Drefs was an indication of the mind, and blot on W Which, whether rich and noble with simplicity, Or light and trifling, wanton in redundancy, blue Hung, like a fign, t inform one of what goods Were to be found within. As for my brother

PHILODAMUS AND SOME

I have fo. And why did I fo? — To check A paffion that's inherent to thy fex. The peacock beauty, tho' it spread its state Quite to the tiptoe firetch of vanity, loved I have! Withes more eyes might did its gaudy train, Unfatisfied in all its prefent pride. soon on and to see ERATIONER VIII 1000 00 00 1

The greater nity we are ever taught no applied at To look on personal persections older and those you've As our prime merit, but the scanty hand Of Nature, in her dealing out those favours, Aided by your advice, has cur'd, I hope, Any excess Epicrates might blame. It is about 18d W I came to fay, I tremble for Philippus I and W stimusoling was Philodiamus. You can't deny, the sob'rest of you all Seek in the glare of ornament to hide, Where-ever Nature wanders from perfection. You're skilful architects, and know to veil With rich entablature and wreathing foliage, Any th' untoward juttings and abutments visi and That would differace your lyinmetry of building ! A Making necessity appearous choice altrio llive and a O Or loften our ind eror Airste telling

Now, my best father, hear me of my brother-PHILODAMUS.

Thou dost recur for ever to that burthen, And wift not see, that I with pains elude it; Nor am I only talkative from age,

Fond

PHOLODAM UAS.

Fond as it is to hear itself discourse, same and doing! But by defign. Why, how can't thou imagine The care, the fondness, the parental friendship; All faithful centinels, who, still on duty, noy squal Ne'er wink their vigilant eyes upon you both; 10 Who told me, ere thou toldft them to thyfelf, The fecret inclinations of thy heart; Could be so drowsy now, as not t' observe A paffion I must disapprove? Tis this and and Welcomes Euphemia's departure to me. ad of and 17 I would be kind, but not to foolishness. And we cord A H - To check

My heart bleeds for him. I dread fomething desperate! PHILODAMUS.

Myself I have surviv'd, more than one cross, still Which youth and folly thought immediate death. Of this no more. Here in the oratory beneated I go to pour my pray'rs, and beg of Heaven Its bleffings on thy marriage and my house. Why doft thou followine? reg isno reg no sloot of

As our prime merit, or ala E anty band

canover story : To thut the oratory. 138 /1 10

PHILODAMUS, TENY TO be A

What needs it shut? I dare not ask the gods What I would wish kept from the ears of men.

2 UM ACO JIH [Exit Philodamus. You can't deny, the fob'rest of you all

Seek in the place of ornament to hide, ' Where-ever Hature Bankrs BonD ped Schion.

With rich entablature TA starting foliage,

You're skillful architects, and know to vest

I fee my brother following Euphemia, on it ynA And will avoid him, till I meet Epicrates ov sail T Or he will jointly try to move my father, an anidal Or foften our fad errand in the telling.

Now, my best father, hear me of my bromer-

PHILODAMUS. Thou doft recur for ever to that butthen,

AMABO got fee, that I with prons clude it; Nor am I only telicative from age,

The riding hills of Cerint's like a mit, too a First Flave your arms freech'd out ready to embase him;

Stay not to land, but plunge litts his belom. Oh blils of godeVI whica can other and in reale,

Unless, as I am ure d by firong despair, which ob as I

In obcome, mangled triumph of your beauty. The became, E is u a a run wu A brone as const

This is too much. This dumb indifference be ob IdA Oh, rather let me suffer all thy hate, a bear, noiser who And learn it from thyself a it would be kind, w I and W As it must end a life of wretchedness, more those would be stind a life of wretchedness, more those would be stind answer mean Cannot these tears and to Obtain one only day; it is all I ask! To min I when A Nor yet the friendship you profess to Erato?

I am past sear of work. T Man it evi He all, at the Her marriage makes my standard was expected at the search of t

Cruel Euphemia! But I fee the cause
Which wings your eagerness to take its flight, and all Think you, a lover's eye could be so dull'd, this soul so drench'd with thick stupidity,
As to o'erlook the thousand treach'rous signs
Which tell, spite of yourself, the darling secret is will the sigh half smother'd, and the melting look, will The thought abstracted, and the ardent wish; notice the With all the kindred attributes of passion, in and I Proclaim, to full conviction, that your heart of the preposses of the proposes of the proposes of the proclaim, to full conviction, that your heart of the preposses of the proposes of the proclaim, to full conviction, that your heart of the preposses of the proposes of the proclaim.

Refrain thy lavith prairs manifed Junit.
Ye tore rers of the world to be specified of the laboratory o

Nor would I now detain you for one moment of the Standard of t n

The rifing hills of Corinth like a mist,
Have your arms stretch'd out ready to embrace him;
Stay not to land, but plunge into his bosom.
Oh bliss of gods! which cannot know increase,
Unless, as I am urg'd by strong despair,
I glut your eyes with what they long to see.
The bleeding, mangled triumph of your beauty.
Eurhemia

Ah! do not force me from my resolution, mood a said?

My reason, and my duty, to discover me to red to do.

What I would lock for ever in this boson, it must be A

Known only to myself. Why will you to the me to A

For what, when told, will draw upon thyself and to A

A dreadful train of bitterest repentance it me and misself.

I am past fear of worse. Oh! tell me all,
Tho' death attend upon the explanation!
Nor think revenge may interrupt your happiness:

'Tis true; one has possession of my heart:
Nor malice can reprove my choice. His worth had a Allow'd by all, the doubted by himself; had a Allow'd by all, the doubted by himself; had a Allow'd by all, the doubted by himself; had a Allow'd by all, the doubted by himself; had a Allow'd by all, the doubted by himself; had a Allow'd by all, the doubted by himself; had a Allow'd by all the doubted by himself; had a Allow'd by all the doubted by himself; had a Allow'd by all the doubted by himself; had a Allow and the Allow Refrain thy lavish praise, or I shall burst.

Ye tort'rers of the fool, Rage, Envy, Jealousy, idea?

I fail beneath the lashing of your scourges!

Forgive my frenzy; I, like you, adore

His wondrous virtues; I, like you, would worship

Perfections heaven created but for him, and I bloom to the control of the control of

Then, are the indulting herizon their

I crave his name, that happied of names; in the O

E O PHE MIA

As and all to be by Why, you are mad!

Nor do deserve to know, noor should you know,
But that I leave you, ne'er to see you more;
And that your wildness of misapprehension,
Fancy'ng another master of my foul,
Has humbled me to the too plain avowal
Of what the delicacy of my sex and bus assemble
Should doom to sleepin enertaiting filence;
It is Philippus a Know you such a dman, or mid MA
That rival of himself hand add at a sadar and Anil 10

PHALLEP BUIS nel Had ad ba A

.a u a 4 Can I be fure

That I wish in support me, or I faint!
Astonishment has wrapp'd me from myself; and o'T
My senses which them round in giddy addies; www A
Too much for nature's sufferance lastere can life.

Cohabit with the tumult of my joy.

Avoid these starts of rapture, which but add in all Fresh possion to the stings of disappointment.

Imagination views her favirite prospect, and and all Fill, sloth in soft delusion, she approaches

Even the blue sky to her eager reach, Skipping the middle space, which teems with obstacles.

What lion glares athwart the promis'd way?

What then can come between me and my wishes?

liot to Erure HE Mol A. side and I will

Are you to learn then what may come between?
What are ingratitude and disobedience?
And if Philippus (devious from the tenor
Of his past life, bursting each sacred band
That links his duty to so mild a father, Obedience to him is but awful friendship)

Could

	O THILDODA WOO.
. (Could take to's arms an unbless'd vagabond,
7	Think not Euphemia of so base a spirit,
7	To ruin by her love the man she loves,
16	or blast by a mean deed of selfishness
7	The only friend destruction left her parents; ob 10/1
	The only mend demucion let not parents;
1	Taint, like a pois nous worm, those kindly branches
	That yield her food and thelter ublive mov tadt baA
	Fancy'ng another aru ac ru ru Pul.
	Has har now event I the too plain avowal
I	Epicrates and Erato to alkosoliob edt tadw 10
	Should doom to (Acpmgeneque dig filence;
1	Ask him to fet this ample roof on fire, quilid a il
(Or fink his riches in the boundless sea, to lavir tad I'
	And he shall laugh less at us. 11 1
15.	PHILAPPUS.
	! mint I 10 am 1Doft thou doom me!
	To pine beneath thy ineffectual love? instantinoftA
	Away with these refinements let us fly; ashall y
1	Away with their tennements i let us my; comot vivi
	Fly to thy mother, till refertment here down oo T
	Thaw into reconcilement She at least the side do
	Will bless me, while I ever seek to pay her,
	In duty, the dear debt I owe for thee. I shall blov A Fresh poison to the fine night pointment.
]	Pay it at home Wow little know that mother; and -
]	Nor would the own the name, should I revisit her;
	Unworthy of her love. Diffres had never it novel
	The pow'r to est into her folid virtue, and gaiquist
	Nor roughen with its ruft the perfect polish.
(One female flave attends her , their joint labour W
1	Earns hard Support, ofe borrowing from nighta and
1	ts foftest hours of rest; and I defraud her,
	While I am absent, of my share of toil.
	Would I had never left her benever left her boy so A
	What are ingratits prepared in the fine of
	Oh, only kind to heighten cruelty luqqilid I i baA
1	EUPHEMIA. old flag sid 10
I	"ve faid too much. We part! take this embrace,
	The first and last I give! Shun we each other lad
Dis	flurT D 2 Con

Trust not a look, and think a figh rebellion Against our duties. So farewell!

[Exit. Shuts the Door.

SUM PHILIPPUS.

One word!

She's gone! she's lost for ever! Oh, my brain! [Ex.

S C E N E V

Now you have heap'd the mealure of my joy

PHILODAMU'S.

The gods have heard my pray'r, and sent their answer. I ask'd them for a blessing on my house, And they have brought this woman to my ear, That I might learn her worth. How nobly strict! How just to me! how duteous to her mother! There I've been negligent—The voice of misery Is often lost to pity's ear by distance. Hide from the eye distress, compassion loses Its best, almost sole entrance to the heart, And leaves disaster by itself to languish. It shall be mended. Erato, Epicrates, Hark ye, a word.

That form and fathion of the present time, Which grown wirts when it is light To antique truth, and sancting of managers

Enter ERATO, EPICRATES DA

Haste thee, my gentle daughter,
Upon a message thou'lt be glad to bear.
I would not hear thee, when thou wouldst have mov'd me
To listen to the forrows of thy brother.
Himself I've heard. Fly to him, child, and tell him,
I love Euphemia little less than he does,
And long to give her to him. Haste, laway.

ERATO.

Oh, happy change! how I shall bles Philippus! [Ex.

My lord, your orders.

-021359

Against curify of Te William SonigA

EPICRATES, PHILODAMUS.

She's gone! the sight for set 1 3h, and brain! [Ex.

Now you have heap'd the measure of my joy
In thus preventing what I meant to urge
In favour of Euphemia. This completes
What you began, in hast'ning my felicity;
Which else had waited the interposition
Of friends, ere I had ty'd this wish'd alliance.
A life so lib'ral in dispensing happiness
Claims every pray'r for blessings in return.

PHILODAMUS.

There is more usury in making happy, of the Than the most studied selfishiness e er theam'd of. My fon, except that his is more tumultuous, Owns not more joy-And as for you, Epicrates, Had the whole world been open to my choice, That I could fay, Here will I give my daughter; Thou wert the man; the one my foul would cleave to. I love thy probity, and gentle nature, That form and Sashion of the present time, Which grows a virtue when it is allied To antique truth, and fanctity of manners; And that timidity of modest merit, Without the bookish, down-look'd awkwardness, Which oft diffraces knowledge—Who attends there? Send here Earinus. hele ad if world To a Servant.

om b'vom evad fibliow EPICRATES.

I dare not think my own. Yet I would wish Your favour should not be mistaken widely, That I may prove not wholly undeserving The hand of Erato.

SCENE

Oh, happy che de Nort Land block Philippus! [Ex.

My lord, your orders.

PHILO-

Thou art too much employ'd thyfelf, to quit The general inspection of this day: Therefore, Barinus, have thou in readiness Some fervant of especial trust, to bear A packet to the port; it is of consequence.

E ARLINU Sind word come stow

Or Æschylus, my Lord; or Xanthias--an wed Philopa.Mus. not mo eval sad W

no b'lieveng ed'on ron ai Ays either : O

E'en which you will: let it be giv'n on board The veffel which Euphemia meant to fail in: Thus better freighted with the chearing news (For this will chear Lyfistrata her mother) Of our alliance in thing the durant box bracery saw I

E POI CRAIT ES sidt of babrauget

Thank you for a goodness Which never acts, as I perceive, by halves But at this time you're all too overhurried For fuch dispatches: at your better leisure This may be done as well.

simede PH. PLODIA MUS. ai sorrel cor lie ?

Contract your transports, and reure a little,

While they twopare this chamber for the ceremon woo somethin Him Bpicrates, on ni mother W I tell thee what. I should be less punctilious Had Fortune never turn'd her back upon her : But where Advertity has fix'd her teeth, any mend will It leaves a foreness, that is fure to imart now and T At light fuspicions of unmeant contempt. The veriest trisles, which, in happier days, Slip our observance, and leave no impression, Affume the shape of Injury and Infult, I nem to field it To rankle in the mind-I write besides about the will To press her, with her earliest convenience, To hasten hither, and to make this house Her place of refidence---Ohd here they come.

Thou art too much HVple Kn B VK B So quit

PHILODAMUS, EUPHEMIA, PHILIPPUS, TO Some fervant of ele. & TARATES

A packet to the possuim A dout in Inco.

Well, Erato, how hast thou sped thy message?
Or meet you difficulties and objections?
What says our son? Does he refuse t'obey us?
Or is Euplania not to be prevail'd on?
What, is she so determin'd on her voyage, doing us a She will not listen?——How! dissolv'd in tears!

I was prepar'd and fortify'd 'gainst misery. Ille 100 100 Unguarded to this vast surprise of joy. Whatever resolution we pretend, and I By my own weakness I'm too well convinced and daid W. Our passions still are woman. Ille of not an indicate the surprise of the surpri

For fuch dispatches a w mardo it in qure

Worth, like thine, and I sall too scarce in man. Thy sex, Euphemia,

Whether in good or bad, will distance ours.
This hand, say, may I give it to Philippus?

My heart was giv'n before D'Oh ecftafy, DA stade and That you approve and realize the gift I state a save of a PHILIPPUS.

Avoid these starts of rapture, which but add
Fresh poison to the stings of disappointment.
Oh best of men! oh Erato! oh friend!
Was ever such a father! Oh! Euphemia!
Dost not adore him! but I know thou dost:
Forgive my wildness—do not laugh at me—

Contract your transports, and retire a little,
While they prepare this chamber for the ceremony,
That gives you to each other, once and ever.

[Exeunt.

End of ACT IL.

ACT MI, SCENE 1.9 A

Of pluadring, to return with empty hands it

Nothing to boalt of, yet not much amils.

Under lo great a maffer in the art

I'm but a prentice, and can only piliter.

RUBRIUS, APRONIUS, SESTIUS.

Ha! our old harbinger! How is't, Apronius?

Glad you're arriv'd: How fare you, Rubrius?
Seftius, I'm yours; welcome to Lampfacus.

Thank you, Apronius: You arriv'd before us?

Ay, these ten days, to order your reception.
But where's the Legate, that I fee him not?
RUBRIUS.

Reposing after the fatigue of journey.

A.P.R.O.N.I.U.S.

Fatigue! why, his fedan steps with that smoothness, So stuff'd with cushions, that he rather seems

To float upon the air, than move on earth.

SESTIUS.

You know his delicacy, to what height He has improved that science, whose perfection Consists in picking cause of discontent, Fatigue, and disappointment, where we gross ones, Thanks to our want of taste, meet satisfaction.

R U B R I U S.

Why, he was four'd but at the last relay,
Because the country round about could furnish
Only some two poor bushels of fresh roses,
Hardly enough to arm his queasy sense
Against eight sturdy Cappadocian slaves,
Who melted as they bore along his litter.

Well, are your purses cramm'd? You have not serv'd

E

Under

Ask Rubrius there, he is an able workman; I'm but a 'prentice, and can only pilfer. RUBRIUS.

Nothing to boast of, yet not much amis. The legate kept t' himself king Nicomedes, As a right royal dish, and only serv'd To his own mess, where we were not to feed: And he has pick'd him to the bone, nay fuck'd His very marrow. Irus might be richer Than Afia's monarch now.

APRONIUS. OV III

At least in vermin. I like your prudence; while you fleec'd the court, But spar'd the people, you enfur'd their love. RUBRIUS. SD and alond avA Enfur'd their love! fay you? enfur'd their love! If plague, war, famine, shipwreck may be lov'd, Then we may have our share on't, and not else.

SESTIUS. How fland your lifts for pillage, and for women? For let me tell you, he's sharp set on both. You need not doubt but he'll inquire for them Soon as he fees you.

RUBRIUS. DE WORK HO! nodositaq sloniv as But, Apronius, mi esa ell What is the present state of vice and villany ab has

In Lampfacus ? APRONIUS:

In little, as at Rome, The great are vicious openly, 'bove fear Of the law's rod, which humbly bows before them; As your mine-fearchers fay their hazle twig Stoops to the latent gold beneath. Again, The middle rank is vicious out of pride, Copying the larger manners of their betters, Ev'n till they swell their narrowness to bursting.

The trading fort are honest, their indentures Invest them with the privilege to cozen us.

I may know wel.s. u tores a & now appetite

What no more honesty alive than this?

APRONIUS.A

Alive! she died a beggar unreliev'd.

RUBRIUS.

So! we may fancy then ourselves at home, Since vice stalks unreprov'd here.

APRONIUS DO ON VOIR

near ai divo Your philosophers at

Subfift by daily holding forth against it, And, in mere gratitude, at night indulge in it.

SESTIUS.

Apronius, you fay nothing to the women. blood of

APRONIUS.

Pooh! they are here, as in all other places.

Why, there's no variation in the fex

But what dress makes: their bodies stripp'd of that, (And could one see their souls stripp'd of their bodies) One could not know an empress from an housemaid.

RUBRIUS.

Now, you're fevere-

SESTIUS.

Hush! here the legate comes.

SCENE II.

VERRES, APRONIUS, RUBRIUS, SESTIUS.

Dyc hear, Apronous I beneal V

Well, my good friends, how like you Lampfacus? 'Tis a brave city.—Art thou here, Apronius? What my purveyor, the futler to my pleasures?

APRONIUS, bowing.

And fometimes to your profit.

VERRES.

As yet. We only spread our fails tow'rds pleasure;
E 2 Thou

Thou look'ft as if the wind blew prosp'rous thither. Read me the bill of fare of beauty's feaft, That I may know where to direct my appetite, Nor throw't away on ordinary diet. nor store on tedW

APRONTUS.

For the first dish, I place upon your board " Euridice, the wife of Aristippus, Reads. "Barely eighteen; her husband some three-score:" The fool dotes on her, and flicks closely to her; A filthy flug on a delicious peach. The crifpness of her youth is green upon her, Yet not to fourness, the improveable, Like fruit another morning's fun had mellow'd. SESTIUS.

He should have kept his fruit for the defiert. RUBRIUS.

The rogue's description is so savoury, That my mouth waters at it. Let's hear on.

APRONIUS But all this beauty fades its less ming merit and but In Erato's Superior lustre dimm'd. would ton bluop and VERRES. Who is this Erato? when comes her turn? I want to hear of her.

APRONIUS.

She is the daughter Of the first man in Lampsacus, Philodamus. She has a fair companion, call'd Euphemia, Whole beauty borders upon competition. Rubir, tus. O. A.

D'ye hear, Apronius! I bespeak Euphemia.

APRONIUS. Go hang, or learn to cater for yourfelf. "The next is Pfyche, wedded to Eubulus, "Near upon thirty, tall, and rather plumpish." If the be past the gush and swell of beauty, Is hard to fay, fo imperceptibly Hath time blown o'er it, that 'twould make one think He strove to mend it; as the rose smells sweeter For being breath'd on, than before it opens.

Yet

afide.

Yet Erato, who blooms in balmy fragrance, Subdues, like incense, all these weak persumes.

mod a redelica bov ERRES.

Why, tell me of them then? Proceed to Erato.

APRONIUS. [Reads.]

"Rhodè, the fair and witty wife of Lyco."

Another may possess more regular features,
Or glow with richer tints from nature's pallette;
Yet where she comes, array'd in all her gaiety,
Her bursts of fancy, and her pleasing petulance,
Variety unweary'd plays about her,
And quite monopolizes all attention;
Till in the pow'rful witchcraft soon absorpt,
Superior beauties wane into neglect.
Except—

Better take un with casa na V live mention'd.

Always excepting Erato,
For that I find's the burthen to thy fong.
I'm all on fire! tell me of Erato.

APRONIUS.

I have a fcore behind to a sale and you door I mistliv

VERRES.

I'll hear no more.

Tell me of Erato! she must be mine.

My faithful pimp, hast thou devis'd the means

For me to meet this paragon of beauty?

Where? when? how soon? to-day? presently? now?

APRONIUS.

There lies the rub. That heav'nly form of hers
Does not start higher from the common level,
Than does her perfect purity of manners
Above the doubtful virtues of this age.

Rubrus.

Apronius! what hast thou to do with purity?
Thou seem'st to name it in a kind of rapture!
APRONIUS.

I am a rascal, else I should not be the link'd to the company. I practise villany, sail.

But must esteem the virtues I don't imitate.

some they have to crown your Sestius.

SESTIUS. wend blooms of the

What! art thou subject to these moral fits?

How long do th' hold thee? dost thou mischief in them?

VERES

Ye trifle, while my foul is on the rack
How to possess her, for I will possess her.
Can money purchase, or must flatt'ry win,
Or force convey her to my raptur'd arms?
Who has invention? let him merit of me
All he can ask, or wish, or I can give.
There's glory in the conquest, if we carry
This barricado'd virtue.

APRONIUS.

All methods feem alike impracticable.

Better take up with one of those I've mention'd.

Had you not heard of her, you had embrac'd

One, tho' a meaner beauty, in your arms,

And thought her Ilia and Egeria,

VERRES.

Villain! upon thy life, dare not suggest The transfer of my passion from that object, Where thou hast rivetted m' imagination.

RUBRIUS! Lound lo om Hall

I have a lucky thought that comes across me. Tho' I am quarter'd on a stately house, and a stately house, Where pride and riches make a vain attempt To pass upon the world for liberality, That only virtue man can't counterfeit; Yet my host views me with a niggard eye, That means, Are you come here to eat me up? Portending penury of hospitality. Let this be your pretence for my removal To the more ample station of Philodamus. You, and your train, dine with me there to-day. Who knows what opportunities may offer? If none, why then the brave make opportunities. Wine, and the gen'ral hurry of the feast, in o' h'shall Shall one inspire, t'other facilitate, Some fortunate attempt to crown your wishes. VERRES.

VERRES.

Let me embrace thee, my best Rubrius.

Order a guard directly to the house.

Rubrius.

But, why a guard?

of ever medw VERRES

Because, by the pretence
To do thee honour, we secure ourselves.
Tread you upon its heels, and I on yours.
Why, now success stretches his hand towards mine,
And gives me more than promises. Come on.

[Exeunt Verres and Rubrius.

SCENE III.

Save for continuence of the prefent harpings.

sestius, APRONIUS.

SESTIUS.

'Twere wrong and dangerous to force the damfel-

APRONIUS.

Who has the moral fit upon him now?

Art thou a Roman, and decline a rape?

Doft thou not fear thy Sabine ancestress,

All pale, should start up from her urn, and chide

The dastard sp'rit of her degenerate son?

A rape in other nations may sound vile.—

In us, 'tis to commem'rate our progenitors.

[Exeunt.

S C E N E VIV.

wexa] Lot with the letterm A. I some the latter with the letter of the letter with the letter latter with the letter latter latt

PHILODAMUS'S House.

PHILODAMUS, EPICRATES, PHILIP-PUS, ERATO, EUPHEMIA.

Go, crown the houshold Gods with freshest slowers,
And

And hang the gay festoon on ev'ry column, Bid my house laugh and imitate its owner.

I feel a joy equivalent to youth,
That dances at my heart. And to be joyful,
Is to be thankful to the gracious gods.
Come near, my children. You whom nature gave me,
Scarce dearer to me than these new acquir'd.
May all Heav'ns blessings light upon you all.

[Lays bis bands on them.

EPICRATES.

You have anticipated all in this:
Nor have you left me matter for a pray'r,
Save for continuance of the present happiness.

PHILIPPUS.

If you, my father, but from the reflection, From the rebound of our content, perceive Such warmth; think how our bosoms glow, on which Felicity darts all her rays direct.

PHILODAMUS.

. Acres out ported or enorgeast ban ga To the women.

Lost in deep thought! I have observed it often,
That any unexpected flow of joy
Borrows from grief its very mien and aspect,
And seems to sadden more than chear the heart.

ERATO.

My thoughts were but petitions to high Heaven,
That such benignity might long preside
O'er all the happiness it has dispensed.

EUPHEMIA.

Mine, that a life entire of strict attention, All care, and all affection, still must leave me Bankrupt in duty to you.

PHILODAMUS.

This I fought not.

I thank you all, however; most, the Gods;

Who have allow'd me to behold my children

Plac'd to my wish: and now I reach the hour

I long have ey'd at distance with desire,

Wherein to shift life's bus'ness from my shoulders,

And sport with the remainder of my days;

As one, who, all his baggage put on board, Saunters, and plays with ev'ry shell and pebble He meets upon the beach, till the wind veer, And then puts off, when summon'd, without hurry. I feel that I have leisure now to die.

My dearest father, shun th' ill-omen'd word:
Nor draw a cloud 'thwart this solemnity,
With the sad thought, of, what the Gods avert!

PHILODAMUS.

I only mean, my child, my work is done;
The ball wound up of all I had to do.

And as to dying——if this very day

It were to happen, why, I've liv'd enough.

EPICRATES.

Why chuse this subject in these happy moments
Which gaiety and joy claim for their own?

PHILODAMUS.

Th' Aruspex and the Augur! let us hear them.

Enter ARUSPEX and AUGUR.

Walk in. Have you perform'd the facrifice?

ARUSPEX.

We have: and our litation was most perfect.

The flame upon the altar, bright and vivid,

Aspir'd to Heaven, and wreath'd its dancing point.

With scarce a groan the placid victim fell.

The form, sight, and complexion of the entrails

Auspicious all, without one threat ning fibre.

Philodam Us.

What fays your observation?

19316G BE

AUGUR.

Accurately,
The Heav'ns we quarter'd, and remark'd the flight
Of ev'ry wing that wander'd thro' the air,
Listen'd to all that spoke to divination.
Num'rous the omens on the happy side,
Naught on the adverse that might derogate.

A word. Lead on the Traceful dance :

And to confirm and ratify the whole,
The eagle wheel'd him in a thousand rings,
Floating upon his wide-expanded vans;
Far on the left, in the blue sky serene
The thunder roll'd, disarm'd of all its fires.

What draw ye from the whole?

ARUSPEX.

To all here present

Long years of happiness that crowd tow'rds light.

AUGUR.

To you, old age; to these a num'rous progeny.

Phieodamus.

Call in the Minstrels, and begin the rites.

Enter MINETRELLS.

Hark ye, my friends, give me some decent hymn; None of those licences, too oft permitted,
Rather encourag'd at these times, which turn
A nuptial feast into a brothel riot.

MINSTREL.
We know our place too well.

PHILODAMUS.

So then, begin:

And you, my gentle children, while they chaunt
The deity prefiding over marriage,
Conceive your vows, heaping the grateful altar
With incense, that shall wast them up to Heaven.

EPITHALAMIUM.

For two Womens Voices moy aval MANY

1st voice. Hymen, oh Hymen, 2d voice. Hafte, hafte, Hesperus,

Both. Thy beaming lamp advance,

Love already chides thy flay

If voice. Lead on the graceful dance:
2d voice. Shut, ah! shut ungrateful day.

If voice.

ist voice. Hymen, oh Hymen.

Man, yet a favage stray'd,
And but of brutes the first;
By liberty was wretched made,
By love itself was curs'd,
Now violence alone employs
To heap his feast, and quench his cruel joys.

2d voice. Hafte, hafte, Hesperus.

Unwillingly you shone,

And beautified the night;

While lust and rapine wak'd alone,

And bay'd thy silver light.

An uncouth world enjoy'd thy toil,

And man uncultur'd as his parent soil.

If voice. Hymen, oh Hymen.

Till at Jove's high beheft
Thou ledd'st thy comely choir;
Order, and Right, behind thee prest,
And temperate Desire;
The social Duties round thee stood,
Link'd in the chains of amity and blood.

2d voice. Haste, haste, Hesperus.

Oh loveliest of stars—— [Ends abrupt, on Cornelius entering with a Roman guard,

PHILODAMUS.

Suspend the song. What means this Roman guard? Retire, my daughters, till we know the cause.

[Exeunt women and all the attendants.

PHILIPPUS. III SAIN

Ye are mistaken. Do ye know this house, And where its owner ranks in Lampsacus? CORNELIUS.

Saxa, and Rufus! Yonder is your guard.

No, no, there's no mistake. Yours, Mutius,

With these three others, all that colonnade.

The

The rest are ready planted. No mistake; I know your house and rank, and know my orders.

PHILIPPUS. [Low to Philodamus.

Let me but drive these fellows out of doors— PhiloDAMU,s.

Rash boy, forbear. These fellows are our masters... EPICRATES.

But the indignity-

PHILODAMUS.

Are you a boy too?

CORNELIUS.

Be not alarm'd. I only follow orders, And am plac'd here to honour Rubrius, Who comes to take his quarters in your house.

EFICRATES.

Why, this is not an inn for ev'ry comer which the Who chuses to set up his staff in it.

PHILIPPUS.

A conful, or a prætor have found here Worthy reception. Legate never claim'd Such privilege, much less a legate's follower.

PHILODAMUS.

Be still; 'tis not this honest soldier's fault. Pray, tell me, friend, who is this Rubrius?

CORNELIUS.

To tell you the plain truth, he's one of those, (We've quantity enough of them at Rome), By hanging on the great, who's learn'd their manners, Or rather overacts: at first admitted For low bustooneries and mean submissions, For being either any thing or nothing, Receiv'd, rejected, feasted, sent on errands, Their fool, companion, pimp, friend, slave, and equal; Grown by degrees so necessary to them, They recollect not their own manufacture, But ev'n strike sail to'm, when he holds his head up, As all such do, and higher than their masters, This sword here earns me coarser bread, but honester.

A guest indeed, who does me mighty honour!

odTno, there a no forester, all that colonia

The legate must have err'd thro' ignorance Of my condition, and I go t'explain it:

. grioD] e of evening I'll convey them to you, a cott at Tarewell, now distributed lower I

With all my heart. I'll obey any orders. GUARD, within.

Enter SOLDIER.

Rubrius comes.

PHILODAMI CORNELIUS.

and find vite 10 What, ho! Stand to your guard.

Stand by, there!

Exit.

PHILODAMUS.

So very quick! why, this is done on purpose To make complaint too flow.

Returning.

PHILIPPUS.

Tis not too late

To shut the door in's face, give me but leave.

PHILODA MUS.

Stay, madman! nor provoke bad things to worle, Since we are flaves, why do we talk like freemen? All that is left us, is fubmiffion.

But we obey the interior of our fords.

Pray, think this boure your own. New, it is for

You won't-

KUBBLIUS.

PHILTPPUS.

No, fure, you won't, my father

PHILODAMUS.

Yes, but I will, and more. Upon your duties; You shall absent you from my house the while. I know your indignation and high spirits. Would you renew the Lapithean fray, And mingle wine with blood? No arguing.

EPICRATES I only with you have no need of us.,

PHILIPPUS.

We may conduct the women to his house?

PHILO--

The legate muliely M A Cott PH quorance

Not glaring in the freets, amid the populace. At close of evening I'll convey them to you. Farewell, now disappear, I hear a bustle.

Exeunt Epicrates and Philippus. GUARD, within.

Stand by.

Returning.

Second GUARD.

Stand by, there!

Rubrius comes. . suma don Rubrius

Now for my best face,

To make complaint too flow.

That it mark no refentment to my guest.

THILODA MUSIC So very mick . Vwhy Bull Is an Burgote

RUBRIU'S.

Trust me, Philodamus, it grieves me much To be a burthen to you! but the legate, Thinking the Roman dignity infring'd By the faint splendour where I last was station'd, Has order'd this remove.

PHILODAMUS That Since we are Is

The case is new,

But we obey th' injunction of our fords. Pray, think this house your own. Nay, it is so: And that it might afford ampler reception, 1074 40

This instant I have sent away my fon.

RUBRIUS, eagerly.

You have not fent away your daughter, too?

PHILODAMUS. diw I ted (2) That needed not! you know her range of chambers Can never interfere with these apartments.

RUBRIUS Wallet nov bloov Your house is royal----(I suppose this door grim but Leads to th' apartment of the women.) only with you PHILODAMUS.

This on the left. and or nacion out Subgos year 2 W.

RUBRIUS.

RUBRIUS.

----And I shall not disgrace it

By those I've bid; the Legate and his train

Will dine here! he was close behind. He comes.

[Horns.

And in right time. I think the table's ferv'd.

Hafte we to meet him.

This is a room of the second s

28 15 1 18 18 18 18 18 -

bluos aw wood mid alary behav Exeunal

Sellius, thy wine resolls upon thyfelf.
We'll try again, and while they found the table.
Take care you all for DA (for box they are

For his debrices, why that's appulouslile, In all the relt be feems an board fellow.

Curie his febricty Lit is to obtlimate

Enter PHILLODAMUS and VERRES.

E The Pura opanes.

We are not to deficient in your history,
But that four very venerable names,
Curius, Cincinnatus, and Fabricius;
Brutus, and Regulus, and Scipio;
With others of like fame; transmit their rays,
Thro' distance and the difference of language.
To influence and light one Grecian world.

Ayy those were characters fit for those times;

Were they to live sgain, they would be wifer.

Or else incur the penaltry, and starve.

Their ignorance we've complimented honesty.

What

--- And I shell not disgrace it

By those I've bid; the Legate and his train Will dine. Legal Ne 3 2 2 8 1 Legal Decomes.

RUBRIUS.

RUBRIUS, APRONIUS, ISESTIUS fuddled.

And in right time. I think the table's ferv'd.

This is a noble feast. I would the giver Had been prevail'd upon to drink more freely. He still evaded, press him how we could.

RUBRIUS.

Curse his sobriety! it is so obstinate, It looks as he suspected our design.

SESTIUS.

For his fobriety, why that's unpardonable; In all the rest he seems an honest fellow.

APRONIUS.

Sestius, thy wine recoils upon thyself.

We'll try again; and, while they spunge the tables,

Take care you call for wine. Oh! here they are.

SCENE II.

Enter PHILODAMUS and VERRES.

PHILODAMUS.

We are not so deficient in your history,
But that some very venerable names,
Curius, Cincinnatus, and Fabricius;
Brutus, and Regulus, and Scipio;
With others of like same; transmit their rays,
Thro' distance and the difference of language,
To influence and light our Grecian world.

VERRES.

Ay, those were characters fit for those times; Were they to live again, they would be wiser, Or else incur the penalty, and starve. Their ignorance we've complimented honesty.

What

What was their merit in despising riches
They had no use for, as they knew no luxury?
PHILODAMUS.

Strange! that the probity, which wrought your greatness, Should not maintain its estimation with you.

RUBRIUS.

My noble guest, and very lib'ral host, Suppose, the while they reinstate the chamber, We call'd for wine. Philodamus grows serious.

PHILODAMUS.

Not in the least; far from it.

RUBRIUS. [Table with Wine.

Bring some wine;

Pour to my landlord here. Why, my good friend, There's nought defective in your hospitality, But that you baulk too much the social bowl, And are not chearful. We embarrass you.

Philodam us.

Oh! not at all.

VERRES.

Trust me, I fear we do.

What! flinch a fober cup! we'll no excess;
I hate a drunkard worse than you can do.

PHILODAMUS.

I am but in the place of a first butler,

Who must keep sober, to observe his master.

APRONIUS.

But you disgrace the office. Why, a butler Drinks twice, in quantity and quality, His master's draught.

PHILODAMUS.

Have me excus'd, I pray you,
Take your own freedom, and allow me mine.
SESTIUS.

Freemen are friends to drink. Look ye, your flave Fears to unbar his bre aft. Now wine commits, As 'twere, a kind of rape upon his fecrets.

PHILODAMUS.

Let me put no restraint upon your pleasures;

But

But for myself—We eat not the same weight,
Why then oblig'd to drink by the same measure?

VERRES.

Press we our host no more. There is a time
When a dull clog hangs on our slagging spirits;
A listlessness, and an indisposition
To mirth, and all the chearful ways of men,
Which wayward struggles 'gainst its remedy,
As patients nauseate the draught that cures them.
I have known music have a great effect
In dissipating this cold, gloomy humour.
Apronius, is your voice in tune?

gadiw sond priAPRONIUS.

Pour is a synth the bear willy say good brand.

There's rought detective in your hospitality. But that you bank Product a could be be the could be be.

When Theseus left his Ariadne,
(Fast in her bed the poor girl was a blinking),
Drowned herself for grief she had nigh;
But second thoughts soon inclin'd her to drinking.

Sh' illumin'd her face, rtillite frome with that brightness, It turn'd to a flar, which gives proof of her lightness. I have a drumbard worse chan you can do.

BRRES.

How fo? I thought the had been crown'd with stars.

Her loves with Bacchus, and her stellar wreath, Are allegorical, and mean no more.

Than the fong tells us.

SESTIUS.

And all fongs tell truth.

A gallant fellow at a rape, that Theseus;
I know his histry: he'd the first of Helen.

R U B R I W s.

Right, Sestius, to make sure of that priority,

Like a wife man, he stole her in her childhood.

Would she were here! not quite indeed so young, Nor yet so far advanc'd, as when she quitted

TRAGEDY.

Lank Menelaus for her curl'd adulterer; Or any other Helen. For that company, had sold lie ball Tho' chosen e'er so well, if only men, making a trippod and Sours into argument, or quickly mopes. What is the feast where women are excluded!

APRONIUS.

If the's to chaffe, find A trough for fwine to gorge at, where they fwill, To furfeiting in noise and nastiness. Will do her barm.

RUBRIUS

Man would immediately relapse to beaft, If woman did not humanize the brute, offering managed rook And make him thave his beard and pare his nails. Where-e'er she treads, good humour leads the way and and T Pleasure, light-hearted mirth, and elegance, in no flet afte A Compose her train, and joy is all her own, imiliant of of Wine was invented to supply her place, it of several come. And but enhances more the want of her. I do an apple of SESTITUS.

I don't find that.

APRONIUS.

Within these walls is one, Who had sham'd Helen, given her the pip, And, to excuse her looks, had made her swear She had not flept the whole precedent night, Tho' she had had her husband by her side. I mean the daughter of our gen'rous hoft. Nay, her companion is almost her rival. And, on my confcience, I could well believe That Leda laid more eggs than we are told of, Which have been formehow kept, and newly hatch'd, To shew true beauty to the present age.

the may know fometoing was and and Vicovery.

It is inhuman to confine the women, sold for the sale. Who best adorn, and ought to share the feast. Let me befeech you, we may have their company.

PHILODAMUS. My daughter in the company of men, Where the mad bowl infpires unmafter'd licence! What! a chafte virgin be a blushing witness To the gross meaning of your lewd allusions!

Bear

Bear the familiar pressure of the hand, And all the ribald manners, now call'd fashion! The thought is infamous. The thought is infamous. The state of the sta

Hark you me, landlord, If she's so chaste, she would not understand them. If not, 'tis not the pressure of the hand Will do her harm. o i nightigue o i

VERRES. ART

In truth, Philodamus, Dirow malv. Your Grecian ceremonial is too ftrict. We'll argue this within;—and shall convince you, That the security of semale virtue of absent and reperson! Rests safest on its early introduction between the miles of To the familiarity of men. Is all vol bas distributed sloquio Come, friends, to the next room. I know you're thirfly To pledge me to the health of this new Helen. [Exeunt all but Sestius and Philodamus. I don't find that.

UIMORE Ashall S C E N E III.

SESTIUS, PHILODAMUS, DE COMME

and not flept the whole precedent night, I no' the had had her bulb au Tragele.

Who had tham'd Molen, given her the Hift! old formality! Hark you me, friend An you will pledge me in a fingle bowl: I'll tell y' a fecret that shall make you laugh. But you'll not blab, for I detest a blabber. him about the You never heard a scheme of greater pleasantry.

PHILODAMUS.O vined out well of He may know fomething worthy my discovery. "Tis fair to catch the truth that's leaking thro' him. [Afide. If but for once then, I accept your challenge. Here's to you. Let me beleech you. We may

SESTIUS.

Now that's spoken like a man. Both drink. Why, you must know we came on purpose hither, To carry off — this, what's her name! this Helen—

45

You can guess who I mean—Don't be a fool now, To blow the secret, and prevent our sport.

All-gracious heav'n! [Afide.]—Oh! never doubt my prudence--Yes! all things join to prove it. [Afide.]—Never fear me.--Oh, facred hospitality profan'd! [Afide.]—
But join your company, lest they suspect
The confidence you've made.

The Legate and his fix very 12 20 your company; Thirdt iduobility and fix fix the company; without imperfect verified aix prefere.

Levillo aix prefere.

Level of a mark of the company for the company;

You do not near me.

Shore hither,

Or we are all undone. Nay, he will find them.

PHILODAMUS, EARINUS:

Selfius fays nothing. str N F A A T selfius fay hear it

Tell what?

PHILODAMUS. I crave thy mercy, my Earinus; Impatience stops itself with its own hurry. Fly to Philippus and Epicrates, Tell them, my guests are vipers, adders, scorpions, That mean to fling to death my daughter's honour, Erato's and Euphemia's—Nay, come back; Why dost thou run away with half thy errand? Tell them-Ye Gods instruct me how to act! Tell them, to arm themselves and servants privily: See that my own are ready---Stay, command them, As they respect and love me, not to strike and mod Till avow'd violence demand refistance.---Once more come back--- Tell them, they hurt not Seftius. What he disclos'd, thanks to his wine, shall save him. Away. [Exit-Earinus.] I've liv'd to blush at my own species! SCENE

PHILLODA AMUS. You can guels who I mean-Don t be a fool now,

All gracious heaven! [And H. Dne and doubt any prud

Yes! all things join to prove it. [dhie.] -Never fear me APRONIUS PHILODAMUS do

But join your company, left they fulped

The confidence york U LIN O R 9 A The Legate and his friends wish for your company; They think their entertainment but imperfect Without your presence.

PHILODAMUS, not perceiving ber. Surely he will find them, Or we are all undone. Nay, he will find them.

PHILOD SWINOS AND RINUS

To blow the facret, and prevent our fport.

You do not hear me.

PHILODA MUS, confus'd. Pardon me, I do

Indeed? and what fays Sestius to that I me n'veed , do

Fly, with the named Viction Red and tell them.

Art thou spream ruoy viction bial I faid the Legate would defire your prefence. Sestius fays nothing, but has delegated His nose to speak as proxy. You may hear it Snore hither.

Toll winer? PHILODAMUS. Well, I go. What dogs are men! tixa ence flops itielf with its own herry.

Fir to Philippus and Epicratus.

Tell them, The netter of the state of the st

Why doft thou run & W. I. N. O. R. T. A. thy errand? So! he suspects our drift, I find : no matter -What dogs are men? I heard the exclamation. Th' expression errs; and is a gross abuse was trained Upon the better animal. No doubt, Were dogs to speak, they would invert the phrase; When they reproach each other—Ho! Cornelius! midbel Hall solw sin of admit bad's CEINE

Away. [Exit Earlings,] Tve liv d to bluth at my own species

A TRAGEDY. 147 To dere to fear, is to affift one dangeriod and a new are S. C. E . NovE . . VII aug and I de sono Enter CORNELIUS Handforne, and young, askit kino Reckong vot I thank me Place at this door a guard, while you and drinn thelw 10 1 Uther the women fout read page with you for as bal CORNELIUSAUE Detelled wrete is a state of the state of th Make good the guard here; and now I attend you. 19 99 1 Exeunt. First Soldier A pretty job of work we are upon! An we're demolish'd, we deserve it richly. A HOIGH 1910H Second Soldier. Ay, all that flay for't; but if there's reliftance, Let those who are to share the honey, stryd og tol , nishli V To drive away the bees brown sidt nogo vitnesini flisen 10 Women within. Ulaon A A Help there look, help hoo sel .vA. Epicrates driver of the country and the revolution who experience of the country Enter CORNELIUS with EUPHEMIA and APRONIUS with ERATO. Tis not decided yet, if you rot a N R O.D No mutiny. PHILLIPPUS Refign her, thou brave food, I wood of Act hurt thee, My fair one no refiftance on omothish und T You see it is in vain, useless as chamour. What's honefly going order i Kondine on... Will no one help? You have not flain my father, That you prefume on fuch unheard of violence! But he were better dead, than fee my shame ob and some is My knees knock under me, M cannot go. To Apronius, who pulls her and I APRONIDS. 9 91 JIH T We'll carry you, not amit on ai al EUPHEMIA. TOO SH Keep up your resolution. Think in what hands we are, and be affur'd, and loss along

A GED Y

APHILODDA MUS. A

To dare to fear, is to affift our danger. Courage! Philippus lives, or we can die.

APRONIUS.

The Legate is gallant, and gay, and generous, Handsome, and young, and rich. Ere long you'll thank me, For what, unthinkingly, you now call violence. It is son! And as for you, my pretty one, there's Rubrius---EUPHEMIA.

Detested wretch! stop thy vile speech---Ye Gods! I fee Philippus, my deliv rer, comes ! brang on boog oxland

N. E. VII. A critivion of work we are upon

Enter EPICRATES, PHILIPPUS, and fervants, arm'd.

EPICRATES, to Apronius. van tant la ... Villain, let go thy facrilegious hold; it or era only should see! Or perish instantly upon this fword and only varya swind o'T APRONIUS, running away. Ay, let Cornelius fight, I like not fighting.

Epicrates drives the foldiers off the flage. PHILIPPUS.

Go follow thy companion, or thou dieft. MAOO CORNELIUS.

'Tis not decided yet, if you, or I. PHILIPPUS.

Refign her, thou brave fool, I would not hurt thee, Thou hast some honesty, although a Roman.

You fee it is in vain, no U L Jan my

What's honesty 'gainst orders? So come on.

radial you minte ton [Fight. | Cornelius falls. | A Buftle within.

Silence the dotard's clamour. Stop his throat. My knees knock under. A. I, M T. H T. U J.

Thus to thy arms----

Lixeunt.

PHILIPPUS, Stopping ber. It is no time for this. Re-enter EPICRATES.

PHILIPUS, to him.

Lose not an instant, but convey to safety and an additional

Euphe-

Euphemia and my fifter; while I fly
To fave a father. Some of you attend me.

[Exeunt on different fides.

CORNELIUS.

This comes of ferving knaves—I have enough on't.

And yet 'tis hard, now—that an honest soldier—
For following—oh!—his orders—should be slain.

Bustle within.

[Dies.

SCENE VII. PHILODAMUS, PHILIPPUS.

PHILODAMUS.

Thank thee, my gallant son, thou'st sav'd my life. Where is my Erato? Where is Euphemia?

PHILIPPUS.

Under strong guard Epicrates conducts them To his own house--Alas! you bleed, my father.

PHILODAMUS.

Fear not, for I am whole; yet the vile Rubrius
Had near fubdued me; till a lucky struggle
Freed me, and pass'd my dagger through his arm.

Thence come these stains.

PHILIPPUS, offe out salem to M

Would it had been his heart!

Or rather that of Verres.

PHILODAMUS.

On, take me f see Who lies here ? out sist , it'd

PHILIPPUS.

This was Cornelius; fain I would have fav'd him,
But stupid duty forc'd him upon death.
What have we now to do? [Cornelius carried off.]

PHILODAMUS, and in bales bal

To draw up our complaint against this Verres, And send it to the Prætor.---Well, Epicrates,

Enter EPICRATES.

Say, are the women fafe?

EPICRATES. ser of send for mal

Yes, they are fafe.

But Verres and his crew had well nigh perish'd.

Fir'd with just indignation at your wrongs,

The populace pursu'd him to his palace,

88

Where,

Where, finding it impossible to enter,
They heap'd up faggots, ev'ry thing combustible,
To have reduc'd him and his house to ashes;
When, most unluckily for our revenge,
Arriv'd the Roman prætor Dolabella,
Whose presence stay'd them, and dispers'd the tumult.
Philodan

I'm glad they were prevented

PHILIPPUS.

And I forry.

For justice, executed by the people,

Loses its name, and grows most dangerous——
What have we here? another Roman guard!

Enter OFFICER and SOLDIERS.

Philodamus, and you, Philippus, Sirs,
Ye are my pris'ners, and must to the forum.

PHILIPPUS.

Pris'ners! for what? because we did not hold a board.
Our throats conveniently, to have them cut;

And is there no mistake, that you omit me?

Oh, take me too! I blush to be at liberty.

You are not charg'd. Their lot deserves no envy.

When Hadrian the prætor, by extortions, Had rak'd th' inhabitants of Utica
Beyond the sufferance of human nature,
Despair, at last, gave vent to their resentment,
And they consum'd him, and his spoils, and palace
To dust, by fire, unquestion'd since of Rome.

I am not here to reason, but command:
So come along.

PHILODAMUS.

Do you, Epicrates,

Acquaint my daughters, and come after us.

[Exeunt all but Epicrates.

EPICRATES.

EPICRATES.

Confusion, thou hast caught us in thy net!---

Enter EUPHEMIA.

EUPHEMIA.

Where is Philippus? tell me, is he fafe?

Why hast thou ventur'd, desp'rate, to this roof? Know you not, all beneath it is accurs'd? Ruin and death inhabit the waste structure; While over-head, like a black cloud, destruction Low'rs on the whole, and meditates to burst On all it finds in the devoted verge. Escape, if yet you may: fly to my house, There shelter from the storm. Why left you Erato?

He lives. The prætor's guard conducts him chain'd, Him and Philodamus, both, to the forum. The Legate's fury drives at fuch a rate, 'Tis manifest at what it will arrive.

EUPHEMIA.

He lives! Bless'd be the tongue that tells me so!

Heav'n and their innocence will soon acquit them,
And punishment must light, where due, on Verres.

Soon as the Roman prætor is inform'd,

He'll blush, they have been chain'd as criminals.

EPICRATES.

Can power blush? or feels oppression shame? Then I'll believe the crocodile may weep; Nay more, surrender his uninjur'd prey. Ah! let us not conside in innocence; What is there else that tyranny can hate? And what it hates, what hinders it to punish?

EUPHEMIA.

Can any tyranny make self-defence
A punishable crime? The Roman virtue
Holds the first station in the world's esteem;
And their politeness has such gen'ral same,
'Tis thought to overpay the wrongs of conquest.

EPICRATES.

I've been at Rome. The infolence of conquerors

H 2 Coin

Coins their own fame, and we, their flaves, adopt What character their pride stamps on themselves. Virtue, at Rome, means to enslave the world. Politeness is another name for luxury, That gorges at a mess the wealth of nations. Such justice as these principles afford, We may expect to find, and nothing better.

EUPHEMIA.

I catch your fears; yet hope you fear too much.

EPICRATES.

Let us prepare us as the worst were certain.

'Tis my request, Euphemia, that you chuse My house, my friendship, and the love of Erato, As your protection in this dread calamity:

And lest you fear (seeing, in friendship's name, How many seek to buy a slave a pennyworth)

Time and familiarity should shrink you

From parity into a mean dependence,

Soon as you pass my threshold, twenty talents

Wait your acceptance.

EUPHEMIA.

Worthy of Philippus!
Thou art his match in virtue as in friendship!
Such thanks as my poor gratitude can pay---EPICRATES.

The time will not admit of farther reasoning.

Let me prevail, and wish you back to Erato.

Farewell. Each minute I'll dispatch a messenger,

Who shall inform you both of all that passes. [Exit.

EUPHEMIA.

Success attend thy steps. [Kneels.] All-ruling Power!

We know not how to name; and therefore wander

Thro' almost infinite denominations,

To mark thy various attributes and functions,

Who must love justice; Oh! if ever, now

Exert thyself, free from thy gen'ral laws,

And speak in prodigies; enact, and vindicate

Thy equitable mandates. Villain Man

Will construe else thy patience a connivance,

And deal out wrong, secure of punishment. [Exit

End of ACT IV.

VERRES. ACT V. SCENE I. And thought the low deather, as to this affair,

DOLABELLA, VERRES is the indignity the flate endures.

DOLABELLA.

I could almost repent me that I came: In inclination of the facted rights of

A little later ---

VERRES. V

Had been all too late.

So violent an infult on the name has now made and Of Roman, then shall pass unvindicated?

DOLABELLA.

I must be of opinion, that the insult Keeps just proportion with the provocation. For what could violence itself do more, Than ravish from a father's arms his daughter, To violate her honour in your own?

VERRES.

There might be that, my lord, may want excuse, But not much blame. If I went felf-invited, It was because these misers grudge t' expose Their statues, pictures, gems---you know I'm curious. Wine and young blood must plead for all that follow'd.

DOLABELLA. ato I tall work soc

Rather too curious. For they tell me, Verres, That your immense collection is extended, By rapine and extortion, to a fize That even beggars all that Rome possesses.

VERRES. T. . sernet but worth A

My lord, I gather for myself and friends. And, by the by, 'tis long fince I observ'd A vacant base stand in your vestibule. I have a master-piece of art, an heifer So exquisitely cast, such through nature, The work of Myro, life is in the brafs, It would with dignity supply the vacancy.

DOLABELLA.

I know it by report, the very fame So many Grecian wits have celebrated.

VERRES.

I vow, my lord, I've started twenty times, And thought she low'd---but, as to this affair, I do assure you, what concerns me most in the list the indignity the state endures.

DOLABELLA.

A state is more dishenour'd in protecting The infringer of the facred rights of nature.

VERRES.

My lord, share my collection as you please.

I hope, when you reflect on the injury, in a property of the injury, in the property of the plant of th

Keeps jult exoportion wir a war of ation.

But of fo ugly nature is your crime,

I know not where to turn me to effect it.

VERRES.

Cornelius stain, and Rubrius forely wounded, and Direct your vengeance to both perpetrators. I don't know if you ever thought worth minding Th' entaglio which I wear upon this finger:
View it, my lord, the subject's somewhat wanton. See how that Leda class in her criss arms
Her am'rous swan, who russes ev'ry feather.
The figure was design'd from my Chelidon
(Poor wench! dying, she left me all her treasure.)
I have been tempted to destroy this ring
A thousand times. The counterfeit resemblance
Makes me quite mad, when I behold her beauties
Tasted by Jove himself.—Would you would wear it
If only to preserve it from my jealousy.

DOLABELLA.

And am beholden to you--but to murther Two innocent men, of elevated stations,
Only that they resisted your attempt---I should not like to have such matter argued,
Before the senate, by your men of virtue.

VERRES.

My friends at Rome, my lord, bought, and to buy, Will Will bear us through. Who cares there for the provinces, Shrowded in distance from their thought and notice? Then---pray, my Lord; what makes a man of virtue? To sell one's knav'ry dearer than another. I had almost forgot—'tis but a trifle—Knowing the vast expenses of your state, Long since I laid aside a little present—
With your permission I will bring it to you To-morrow morning; nay, 'tis nothing more Than some poor hundred thousand sesterces.

Double Black and another and the provinces, Shrowded and Sesterces.

I thank you for your love, and I accept them.

Why, as you fay, in such a distant province—

The majesty of Rome—Cornelius slain——

And your high birth—require this vindication.

Where are the prisoners?

I am for death, and said sa a sa V

And, were I to advise, immediate sentence
Were doubly useful, by impressing awe
Of your authority, and stifling tumults.

D.O. L. A. B. E. D. A.

And you fay well; let them appear before us. Verres, be you and Seftius my affessors; So, take your seats. Bring in the prisoners.

. Stand by!

Love, daty, obligation, can impose, My forces are extensive, and moon with them, V. sranolir of the prior of them,

S C E No E IL mode els

Enter PHILODAMUS, EPICRATES, PHILIPPUS, and Audience of the form of the Philippus flores on feeing Verres of the Total
Dolabella.

We fit not here to have our ears fatigu'd

With fet orations from yourselves; much less

With the stale subterfuges of hir'd advocates,

Who, dodging thro a thousand circumstances,

Hope, in the course of a long winded argument,

Obscure, traverse, involved, to warp the judgment.

Which

Which way they please, when they've bewilder'd sense.
This matter needs no arguing, and no witnesses,
Unless you chuse the body of Cornelius,
A Roman citizen, slain by your hands,
Beneath your roof, should be produc'd in court.

We shall not tire your patience. I had thought, when I appear'd before the Roman prætor, Without employing any turn of eloquence, To've laid out a plain story to his hearing, Th' undue invasion of a house like mine, Insolence, injury, and violence Suffer'd, at length repell'd. I own it needless. Verres, plac'd by you on the seat of judgment, Cuts it all short—and we expect our sentence.

DOLABELLA, To bis Affesfors.

I am for death, and you?

And, were Atab for Jingmediate fer tende

Were doubly useful, is un real and

O.L bnA. who title and fifting tumules.

EPICRATES.

Forgive, most noble, if I interfere

With your injunction. I'm no venal advocate,
But am connected with these prisoners
By ev'ry band that friendship and esteem,
Love, duty, obligation, can impose.

My fortunes are extensive, and shall answer

Whatever mulc't you please to levy on them, (Nay take them all: I never can be poor,
While I reslect how well they were employ'd)
So that their lives be spar'd, and you accept
The ruin of us three as equipollent
For one, the scum of Rome by birth and station.

VERRES.

Most noble Dolabella, not to fit
Quite useless in this honourable place,
Permit me to observe, this forward pleader
Makes ev'n his intercession aggravate.
The mistress of the world has ever seen
Her meanest citizen as of more dignity

Than

Than any fubject conquer'd by those citizens; And the demands that blood compensate blood. Retire, and thank the lenity that spares you.

Dot ABELLA. In Dinance

Verres, you speak our thoughts most accurately. PHILIPPUS. TO Verres.

Had it been thee, and not thy senseless agent, Whom, in a fifter's cause, I bravely slew, I would not have repin'd to bear these chains, Nor what is worse to follow. As it is, We thank you, that, determin'd to destroy us, You fave us an unprofiting defence.

PHILODAMUS. Happy condition of your provinces! We were to learn till now, that we rebel, If we dispute your sovereign dominion and an all and a series are all and a series are a series and a series are a series Over our matrons, and our daughters honour.

DOLABELLA.

We have indulg'd you farther than we meant, In large discourse, which you have us'd too freely. Bear them away to death. Let the axe fever Their heads and bodies

PHILODAMUS.

By your leave, one moment. I do believe Heav'n cannot be but just. Its gates are open, in another manner, Than to the general requests of men, When innocence, fubdu'd by hard oppression, Claims its avenging hand. In thy due hour, When Verres shall be ripe for punishment, When the large growth of villany thall bend when A His branches to the earth with their own weight, I trust thou wilt, in adequate reprisil, and lead of Set up thy hour-glass of retaliation. I think I fee thee, not, as I am now, Going to die; death is no penalty. But abject, pale, contemn'd, shunn'd, and deserted, By those who share thy spoils. Banish'd, and wandering Thro' provinces thy rapine trod before. W. I bliso W.

PHILIPPUS.

Total

Oh heav'n! if there be yet in Rome one heart,
One foul, that's worthy of thy inspiration,
One tongue that dares to plead the cause of innocence,
(And something says within me, there is one
Who shall retort the doings of this day),
Do thou inform that heart, that soul, that tongue,
With the coercive force of eloquence,
The energy of language; pour from thence
The mighty torrent of convictive truth,
Till conscience strike with dumbness thy defenders,
And guilt and shame anticipate that sentence
Thou dare not stay to hear pronounc'd upon thee.

And thou, differer of the country's justice, we have to revenge our wrongs upon that country, we for trufting justice in no firmer hands.

Take them away. See execution done.

la large discourse, which of players used too freely

Bear them away to death. Let the averth ed brand

医亚星生产1种型

... ts gates are open, in another manner,

Then to the inneral sequents s 1300,2 When inneconce, failed d by hard eppression,

Dolar Bella, folus.

I am not half the villain of this Verres,
And yet I am a villain. Tis too plain.

To be a villain, and yet hate a villain,
To feel that vigilant and folemn monitor,
Confcience, put in her caveat to a deed,
And yet to supersede her holy mandates,
And give that deed effect; what is it else,
Than to be multiplied into two men,
That wage continual war against each other?
Would I were of a piece! either all honest,
Or else above sensation of remorse.

ti ot se Enter en Officer. villamot fiel aid I

What would you I noy no guilleld win sale servery H

I son on to orders, A ST or O Command her?

Most humbly such they may have their bodies. The relations of the sufferers of bill most humbly such they may have their bodies. The For all due rites, so itself to bus with being your read ofference of the sufference of bill most being the suf

To thee? Her inchaling Bair of her.

ale See that they have my order is all residential buildion to the will of Heaven.

It were not yet too late to bid them live!

But then I must refund m' ill-gotten wealth, and I said Thou hast betray'd me, all-corrupting gold,

And thaw'd the yielding principles of honesty and I late a puddle of corrupted trash! but the sear of stame!

Into a puddle of corrupted trash! but the sear of stame!

I am not superstitious, yet am stattled at a post and it.

That he, who, perhaps, hever heard of Gicero, adv.

Should mark him in his lineaments so strongly;

Methought I felt myself beneath the lash, and sold the stattled at the stattle at the stattled at the stattled at the stattle at the stattled at the stattle at the st

Oh Irrend indeed! What would I give for words? Yet could they work they All Heep irend indeed!

Let none, untried by pow'r, think himself virtuous,

But for authority I'd still been honest.

PHILODAMUS, PHILIPPUS, going to execution. EPICRATES, Guards, &c.

EPICRATES. IN tied ton over 1

Fear not, he must desist from his mad enterprize; Mean time, we arm, with utmost speed, a vessel, Which shall transport us, past his search, to safety.

Tis well, Epicrates, I would not fee her,
For much I doubt how my own resolution
Might stand the burst of so much tenderness.

She's most desirous to receive by me no hound on the The bleffing and last orders of a father.

PHILIPPUS

PHILODAMUS.

My bleffing; why, my life has been to blefs her.

I 2

This

This last formality can add no weight to it;
However, take my bleffing on you both;
Then, as to orders, what should I command her?
Bid her persist in the pursuit of virtue?
Her life insures she will; or should I charge her
She bear unvaried duty and affection
To thee? Her inclinations answer for her.
Be it your care to comfort her distress,
Teach her submission to the will of Heaven.

EPICRATES. OF DOY SON STOWN

Alas! my father, what a leave to take!

My death-bed ow'd me a feverer end.
Another word, and then we part, Epicrates.
One article remains of dearest import,
If this fierce tempest of calamity,
When fall'n its rage, should chance to drive on shore
Any the wrecks and fragments of my fortunes,
Collect them safely for Euphemia.

I have already offer'd her my house, nom on sinds it's Begg'd her to share my fortunes dyldar voccini and T

PHILIPPUS, embracing bim: good to.

. Donot and lin Oh! Epicrates. 1 10 ll

Oh friend indeed! What would I give for words?
Yet could they more than call thee, friend indeed!
EFICRATES.

Oh my Philippus! Oh my better half!

GUARD.

Come, make hafte.

PHILIPPUS. And Man don! W

My last thoughts to Euphemia and my fister.

Exit Epicrates.

PHILODAMUS.

Be gone, Epicrates. And now, Philippus, I have no leave to take of thee, my boy; We're bound on the fame voyage. Only this; I have prevail'd upon the executioner To fpare thy eyes my death; and you wait here Till I am past. So, now lead on, I'm ready.

PHILIPPUS.

3

But Mid the world .sugar Philippe But his hear the at

To thy last thought the same, my gentle father ! [Exit Philodamus.

Enter EUPHEMIA. im on anorth

Why art thou here, Euphemia? to unman me?

Now, that I've born the parting of a father,
With all I have of steadiness, art thou come
To rob me of that last of vanities,
Which cowards sometimes reach, the dying resolute?
I'm young, am born to dignity, and affluence;
Have health untainted, and th' esteem of friends.
These I could have resign'd, yet be myself,
And mock the phantom death. What is a world
That one must ask the leave of Rome to live in?
But when I view thy beauties, which I quit
Purchas'd, but unpossess'd; there lies the agony,
And it grows terrible indeed to die.

EUPHEMIA. Tolo ban writel A

I came to steel thy breast, and not to melt it
Into the whining softness of a woman.
And why regret to die? since we have lov'd,
And have enjoy'd already, never doubt it,
All that is keen and exquisite in love.
The rest deserves small notice. Be like me.
I feel my soul exalted 'bove itself,
Secure, and pleas'd, in its own resolution,
It looks with intrepidity on death.

Philippus.

What dost thou mean, Euphemia? thou alarm'st me. There's a determination in thine eye, And firmness in thy speech, that makes me tremble More than the axe that waits me. Oh! dismiss Thy desp'rate thought whatever. Live, Euphemia, Cherish my memory, nor let that affect thee, Beyond a melancholy recollection, How much we lov'd, and how unfortunately.

EUPHEMIA.

There are, Philippus, in Distres's quiver, Some shafts so very deeply barb'd, they mock The unavailing art that would extract them, And will be left to rankle in the wound.

But did the world possess the balm to heal them, 'Twere meanness to furvive distinguish'd wretchedness. What! to be pointed at, and shown a fight, As one no mifery could drive from life! See here the remedy of ev'ry wee. See here the cure of Verres. Shews a dagger.

emes up Philippus. To sved I land W

Twas my fear.

That dagger! no, thou must not, shalt not use it. Ah! do not liften to that witch Despair, Who gilds with a false sun-shine the black precipice T' allure the fuff'ring mind?

EUPHEMIA.

The fuff ring mind? 'Twas then it suffer'd, when my glory bid The chaim of separation yawn between us. 'Twas harder to refolve to part our loves Adoring and ador'd, than share thy death.

PHILIPPUS. In this dread hour it was my confolation, Epicrates had lent thee noble shelter From all the storms that yet might buffet life. Oh! harbour there, and drop the focial tear, In confort, oft as you shall think of me, Till flow-pac'd time, nay, habitude of forrow Induce fatiety of itself. Who knows? Long years of happiness may wait behind, That shall do justice to Euphemia's merit.

EUPHEMIA.

Yes, and be comforted; dry up my tears; My mourning weeds convert to ornament; Whimper but now and then; and in a moment, Call any other man my only love. The thought is paltry. Oh! how I disdain it! Why now, methinks, I'm at the pitch of happiness, High in my own effeem. 'Tis only now That I feel worthy of a flame like thine: I'm all on fire to shuffle off this life. Tis an impatience that still spurs me forward. The Gods conceal from those they force to live How happy 'tis to die, left they defift

From

From their hard drudg'ry, and desert their station.

If ever tender thought of me has glow'd Within that gentle bosom---dost not hear, Horrid! the blow that ends the best of fathers?

[Noise within.

The time demands me. Let me yet prevail. ---

PHILIPPOS.

and the a to sharm we "Tis my last request." had

EUPHEMIA.

But a request you have no right to make.

Nay, talk no more. Farewell. This last embrace.

If memory extend beyond the urn,

Still shall we love each other. Now, away.

Farewell, my love, my pride, my happiness.

That I am thine, o'er-pays the loss of life.

PHILIPPUS.

lang. by von lan man in There is time anongh

And should the tyrant grant us till to-morrow.
Think you we'd take it?

Guard takes bold of bim.

PHILIPPUS.

I go---but would .--- Tis easier to die.

[Exit, she looking fondly after him, till, just as he is out of sight, she stabs herself. He re-enters.

Unhand me for a moment, rash Euphemia

EUPHEMIA.

I thought thee farther—or had spar'd thee this.

"Tis over—haste—oh loiter not behind—
Where are you—now you're lost.—I see thee not.—
Night hangs upon my eyes—and thou art no where.—
Oh, now again I know him—'tis Philippus.—
At least remember—oh—that I die—thine.

PHILIPPUS.

Kind executioner, be quick, dispatch.---Why do I ask what I can do myself

With readier expedition. [Stabs himself with her dagger. Guard.

Haste, prevent him,

You are too late.

PHILIPPUS.

I thank thee for thy leffon.

Now, Verres, thy revenge is half deceiv'd.

Now, Dolabella, I elude thy fentence.

Stay, let me feize her hand, ere light defert me,

Else I shall wander in uncertain search,

And find it not.—Why now, in spite of numbness,

I hold thee fast---to separate---no more.

....Enter EPICRATES

EPICRATE SOLOTO VIOLOTIC

Sure she came hither; yet I dread to find her,
Ha! is it so? my fears inform'd me just.
Philippus, art thou here? I knew indeed
Death waited for thee, but in other place,
And other manner. Better as it is.
Tears, by your leave, a while; there's time enough
For your indulgence. Who commands the guard here?

OFFICER.

"Tis I.

EPICRATES.

Here is an order from the prætor,
Rend'ring their bodies up to my disposal.
It names but two, the third was unforeseen,
But will be undisputed. Let some bear them,
To join their fathers corpse; then to my house,
Their hands fast link'd; convey them, if you can,
Without disjointing their so tender union.

Virtue, thou art not for this present world.
Injustice, 'tis thine own. But there is somewhere, Some happy clime beyond Oppression's reach, Whence Tyranny retires its shorten'd arm, And compensation waits for suff'ring innocence. Bear them away, I follow.---- [Exit, the bodies carried before bim.

The END.